

HEREDITARY ACQUIRED ANEMIA

Centurion
UNIVERSITY
Shaping Lives...
Empowering Communities...

By
Ms. RUPALI RUPASMITA ROUT
ASSISTANT PROFESSOR

INTRODUCTION:

Hereditary acquired anemia is not a well-defined medical term. Anemia refers to a condition in which a person has a low red blood cell count or low levels of haemoglobin.

Hereditary anemia refers to anemia that is inherited genetically, such as sickle cell anemia, thalassemia, or hereditary spherocytosis. These types of anemia are caused by mutations in genes that affect the production of hemoglobin or function of red blood cells.